INTRODUCTION

As mentioned by M. CONNOLLY (1922b, p. 485) : « In the years just previous to 1914 an enormous amount of material of the highest conchological importance was sent home from Tropical Africa by Messrs. A. BLAYNEY PERCIVAL, Robin KEMP, and C. W. WOODHOUSE. Some of the results of their labours were published by H. B. PRESTON in a series of short papers on a wide range of genera, culminating in two longer articles specializing the Streptaxidae and Zonitidae of that part of the Continent ».

In fact, according to S. P. DANCE (1966, p. 223), H. B. PRESTON published the descriptions of over a thousand new species and thirty-eight genera, collected in different parts of the world.

The publication of many new species, belonging to the Stenogyridae and other families was delayed by the first world war. But H. B. PRESTON had already distributed paratypes of numerous unpublished species to public and private collections.

M. CONNOLLY (1922b, p. 485) states that he acquired from H. B. PRESTON the whole collection of over 300 shells selected by the latter author as types of the unpublished species. M. CONNOLLY intended to describe these species under the names originally suggested by H. B. PRESTON. Unfortunately he does not indicate in his publications which of the species bear the names proposed by H. B. PRESTON. On the other hand, M. CONNOLLY described only African species. There remain still a number of PRESTON's shells with unpublished names in scientific and private collections all over the world.

The collections of the Royal Institute of Natural Sciences of Belgium, and especially the famous DAUTZENBERG-collection, contain many of PRESTON's published and unpublished species. As I often received requests from colleagues of other institutions as to where H. B. PRESTON described a given species, I established a file-system of all of the new names of Mollusca published by this author. As M. CONNOLLY described many of the unpublished species which H. B. PRESTON had already distributed, I completed the file-system with all of CONNOLLY's new names.

In order to put these references at the disposal of malacologists and conchologists interested in PRESTON's and CONNOLLY's species, I present herewith a complete list of the publications of these authors (based on the Zoological Record) and an alphabetically arranged catalogue of all the new names introduced by them. Under each name I give : (a) the references of the publication; (b) the type-and other localities, with the original geographical names, unaltered with respect to recent changes; and (c) references describing the anatomy (A.) or the radula (R.). Where the original description does not give an illustration of the type-specimen, I have added wherever possible a reference to one of PRESTON's or CONNOLLY's publications wherein the species is depicted. The original generic names are mentioned, but if H. B. PRESTON or M. CONNOLLY changed them subsequently, I cite the references.

In order to expedite the publication of this catalogue, I do not consider the validity of the species or genera.

It is possible that other authors have described some of the unpublished species of H. B. PRESTON. This list will in any case permit the verification if and where H. B. PRESTON and M. CONNOLLY published their species, genera, or other taxonomic categories.
